The new link could accentuate the trend for employment to increase in the southeast and decline in the north and west. It would further stimulate population growth on London's fringe; and in Kent, expanding towns; new industries and transport needs would challenge planners. Professor M.J.Wise. pp. 391-394.

That the project is at last becoming a reality is in part due to the recent progress in tunnel engineering. There are two radically different ways of making underwater tunnels: here one article is devoted to each: Tunnelling through the Earth – Sinking through the Water.)
